Explain your selected case study, describe the central problem, and recommend a practical solution.

The fictional Kestrel Ridge clean energy pilot placed rooftop solar collectors on public transit shelters. Each shelter stored excess power in a shared neighborhood battery, and a dispatch algorithm rerouted reserve electricity during peak evening hours. The pilot measured kilowatt-hours generated, battery degradation, and outage frequency over six months.